

Alice Conklin, Associate Professor of History, welcomes conference participants to The Race in Culture: 20th-Century Ethnology and Empire in Comparative Perspective on May 1, 2009, at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies.

Dorothy Noyes, Professor of English, welcomes participants to The Race in Culture conference, which examined the shift from "race" to "culture" as the internationally legitimate framing of human difference in France, the United States, and China.

Participants in the From Physical to Cultural Anthropology? panel share a laugh during The Race in Culture conference. They include (from left to right) David Horn, Comparative Studies; Tracy Teslow, History, University of Cincinnati; Sigrid Schmalzer, History, University of Massachusetts; Alice Conklin, History; and Douglas Crews, Anthropology.

Michelle Brittain (center) of Georgia State University posed a question during the From Physical to Cultural Anthropology panel at The Race in Culture Conference on May 1, 2009.

Tracy Teslow (left) of the University of Cincinnati, speaks with (left to right) Kevin Boyle, Professor of History at Ohio State; Michelle Brattain of Georgia State; and Stephen Kern, Professor of History at Ohio State, during a break in The Race in Culture conference on May 1, 2009.

Sheila Bock (left) and Lauren Ovchinnikov (center) of the Center for Folklore Studies talk with Dorothy Noyes, director of the center and one of the organizers of The Race in Culture conference, held May 1, 2009, at the Mershon Center.

Jennifer Willing, Associate Professor of French, talks with Kirk Denton, Associate Professor of East Asian Languages and Literatures, during a break at The Race in Culture conference.

(Front row) Leo Coleman (left) of Comparative Studies talks with Mbugua Mungai, a visiting Fulbright fellow from Kenyatta University in Nairobi Kenya, as Kwaku Korang (left) of African-American and African Studies chats with Danielle Fosler-Lussier of the School of Music behind them during a break at The Race in Culture conference.

Ray Cashman (left) of the Center for Folklore Studies, talks with Jason Baird Jackson of the Folklore Institute at Indiana University in Bloomington during a break at The Race in Culture conference.

Participants in The Race in Culture conference talk in the lobby of the Mershon Center during a break between panels.